The afternoon sun was warm on the five workmen there, busy upon doors and window-frames and wainscoting. A ( 1 ) of pine-wood from a tent-like pile of planks outside the open door ( 2 ) itself with the scent of the elder bushes which were spreading their summer snow close to the open window opposite; the ( 3 ) sunbeams shone through the transparent shavings that flew before the steady plane, and lit ( 4 ) the fine grain of the oak panelling which stood ( 5 ) against the wall. | B | Maggie paused a moment; then, determined to make an end of Tom's right to accuse her of deceit, she said haughtily: |
| C | "Is that all?" said Tom, looking straight at her with his frown. |
| D | "And you encouraged him?" said Tom, with an expression of disgust. |
| E | "No, not quite all. On Saturday he told me that he loved me. I didn't think of it before then; I had only thought of him as an old friend." |
| F | "But I have nothing to say to you beyond this: tell me what has passed between you and Philip Wakem. When did you first meet him in the Red Deeps?" |

The Invisible Man

by H. G. Wells

Griffin is a scientist who experimented with invisibility. In the process, he made himself invisible but is unable to make himself visible again. In this extract, he has arrived at the village of Iping, where he is staying at an inn. This inn is run by George and Janny Hall.

At four o'clock, when it was fairly dark and Mrs Hall was screwing up her courage to go in and ask her visitor if he would take some tea, Teddy Henfrey, the clock-jobber, came into the bar. "My sakes! Mrs Hall," said he, "but this is terrible weather for thin boots!" The snow outside was falling faster.

Mrs Hall agreed, and then noticed he had his bag with him. "Now you're here Teddy," said she, "I'd be glad if you'd give th' old clock in the parlour a bit of a look. 'Tis going, and it strikes well and hearty; but the hour-hand won't do nuthin' but point at six." And leading the way, she went across to the parlour door and rapped and entered.

Her visitor, she saw as she opened the door, was seated in the armchair before the fire, dozing it would seem, with his bandaged head drooping on one side. The only light in the room was the red glow from the fire — which lit his eyes like adverse railway signals, but left his downcast face in darkness — and the scanty vestiges of the day that came in through the open door. Everything was ruddy, shadowy, and indistinct to her, the more so since she had just been lighting the bar lamp, and her eyes were dazzled. But for a second it seemed to her that the man she looked at had an enormous mouth wide open — a vast and incredible mouth that swallowed the whole of the lower portion of his face. It was the sensation of a moment: the white-bound head, the monstrous goggle eyes, and this huge yawn below it. Then he stirred, started up in his chair, put up his hand. She opened the door wide, so that the room was lighter, and she saw him more clearly, with the muffler held up to his face just as she had seen him hold the serviette before. The shadows, she fancied, had tricked her.

"Would you mind, sir, this man a-coming to look at the clock, sir?" she said, recovering from the momentary shock.

"Look at the clock?" he said, staring round in a drowsy manner, and speaking over his hand, and then, getting more fully awake, "Certainly."

Mrs Hall went away to get a lamp, and he rose and stretched himself. Then came the light, and Mr Teddy Henfrey, entering, was confronted by this bandaged person. He was, he says, "taken aback."

"Good afternoon," said the stranger, regarding him — as Mr Henfrey says, with a vivid sense of the dark spectacles — "like a lobster."

"I hope," said Mr Henfrey, "that it's no intrusion."

"None whatever," said the stranger, "certainly — but, as a rule, I like to be alone and undisturbed. But I'm really glad to have the clock seen to," he said, seeing a certain hesitation in Mr Henfrey's manner, "very glad." Mr Henfrey had intended to apologise and withdraw, but this anticipation reassured him. The stranger turned around with his back to the fireplace and put his hands behind his back. "And presently," he said, "when the clock-mending is over, I think I should like to have some tea. But not till the clock-mending is over."

The passage below is taken from A Son of Courage, by Archie P. McKishnie.
Read it carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

Mrs Wilson lit the coal-oil lamp and placed it in the centre of the kitchen table; then she turned toward the door, her head half bent in a listening attitude.

A brown water-spaniel waddled from the woodshed into the room, four bright-eyed puppies at her heels, and stood in the glow, half in the shadow, short tail ingratiatingly awag.

"Scoot you!" commanded the woman, and with a wild scurry mother dog and puppies turned and fled to the friendly darkness of their retreat.

Mrs Wilson stood with frowning gaze fastened on the door. She was a tall, angular woman of some forty years, heavy of features, as she was when occasion demanded it, heavy of hand.

Look at the passage again if you need to.

76 What is Mrs Wilson doing in this extract?
